Statement:

We are living in a critical and extraordinary time, and we have before us a transformative moment in Alaskan history. We are not left or right, rich or poor, old or young... we are Alaskans concerned about Alaska. We are all in this together.

While many feel that the voice of the average citizen has been lost and special interests have outright bought so many of our political representatives, there still remains a hunger for the visionary democracy we could, should, and can be. We deserve representation that works for all of us, and we will do it together.

This election is not about any single candidate or this election cycle; this election is about challenging the same attitudes that have plagued the state for decades. In 2016, this has become a year about taking back government for us, and we can reclaim a sense of direction and common decency.

This is about us. It is about our children and grandchildren and what kind of state and what kind of planet we will leave for them. It will require us to stand up and say, enough is enough – this state belongs to all Alaskans and not just a few wealthy individuals and multinational corporations. We must lead by example and raise the next generation with a sense of fiscal and moral responsibility.

It will require us to stand up and call out the same slick fixes and bandaids we have tried before.

Let's tell them ENOUGH is ENOUGH.
