STATEMENT:
I'm a community leader with over 40 years of business experience in engineering, education, manufacturing, mining, and oil and gas. I grew up in this state, raised my family, and created businesses. I've worked in the industries that built this state, and I understand how to expand on that foundation for Alaska's future.

We need to focus on what's next for Alaska. Overreliance on legacy industries and cuts to essential services has left our economy in a managed decline. Success should be measured by whether Alaskans can own a home, start and grow a business, and raise their families here. Creating that success will require reliable and affordable energy, sound infrastructure, fiscal stability, and new opportunities in our economy.

But our future begins and ends with our children. We need to deliver sufficient, stable funding to our schools, expect results, and pass defined-benefit legislation to retain and recruit quality teachers because our families deserve confidence in our education system.

My goal is always to give communities, businesses, and people the tools they need to succeed. As a legislator, that means working with my community to develop the policies and funding needed to provide essential state services and support local capacity, enabling each community, its families, and businesses to thrive.

It's time to build the future. An economy powered by Alaskans, with opportunities for Alaskans. An economy where people don't need to leave to find a job, where our families can put down roots and stay.

Let's build it together.
